ROSATI-KAIN REINSTATES ITS ROSATI GRAS CELEBRATION School-wide spring picnic is a much-loved tradition

St. Louis – After a 2-year hiatus, Rosati Gras is back. On April 27, 2009, Rosati-Kain students, faculty and staff will celebrate Rosati Gras at the City Museum. The theme for Rosati Gras 2009 is, appropriately, “It’s back!”

Rosati Gras is a day full of fun, bonding and of course, the time-honored R-K tradition of eating.

Hosting the event at the City Museum solved a number of logistical issues that prevented the event from happening at Forest Park for the past 2 years.

The City Museum, which opened in 1997, is housed in the 600,000 square foot warehouse that was formerly the International Show Company. The Web site, citymuseum.org, describes the building as an eclectic mix of playground, funhouse, surrealism and architectural marvel made out of recycled and unique objects.

Rosati-Kain will provide transportation for students and faculty. Juniors and seniors are allowed to drive in a carpool to the Museum. Once at the museum, students will be able to take in all that the venue has to offer, from playing and climbing, to enjoying some very unique art. Ted Drewes treats will be distributed at the end of the day.

“Rosati Gras was a highly anticipated tradition, and the entire school is excited about its return. I love the chance to have a good time with students and faculty in a low-key atmosphere,” said Judy Mohan, Rosati-Kain Principal.
